The War Today

Gaza Breaks the Ceasefire in Plain Sight as Hamas Rebuilds Under Iran’s Umbrella

Hamas continues violating ceasefire commitments as gunmen crossed the Yellow Line in northern Gaza and engaged IDF troops. Multiple incidents occurred throughout the day, including sniper fire in Khan Yunis and shots near Rafah. The significant discovery came when IDF engineering units uncovered an eight-tube rocket launcher concealed in IDF-controlled territory, loaded with four rockets aimed at Israel, alongside seized rifles, grenades, explosives and uniforms.

Israeli strikes expanded across Zeitoun, Shuja’iyya, Khan Yunis, and Mawasi as Southern Command confirmed Hamas is rebuilding military battalions, gathering intelligence and preparing “a limited surprise attack.” The logistics supply flights reached their 1,000-flight milestone.

On a separate operational front, Mossad exposed a Hamas weapons pipeline spanning Austria, Germany, Turkey, and Qatar, including a cache connected to Muhammad Na’im, son of senior Hamas politburo member Basem Na’im. Reports indicate a former CIA officer claims Israel warned Washington during June’s Iran conflict window that if the U.S. did not strike Iran’s underground nuclear sites, Israel would consider using its own strategic arsenal.

ASSESSMENT

Hamas coordinates with Hezbollah and Iran to rebuild resistance infrastructure across all fronts, using the ceasefire as operational cover. The rocket launcher discovery proves Hamas treats the Yellow Line as penetrable terrain. Mossad's exposures across Europe demonstrate aggressive weapons reconstruction abroad. The ceasefire is operationally defunct; any ISF built on this fiction will collapse when the next concealed launcher fires.

Northern Front Edges Toward Preemption

The northern theater tightened as the IDF struck Hezbollah weapons depots in civilian neighborhoods and exposed dozens of command posts and arms caches in Beit Lif. A senior Israeli security official warned that “a significant operation across Lebanon is about to begin,” stating Israel “will not return to the period before October 7.”

Meanwhile, a Lebanese minister declared Hezbollah has a “right to rearm,” and Beirut filed an urgent UN complaint over an Israeli concrete barrier it claims crosses the Blue Line. IDF leadership toured the Israeli-held Syrian buffer, reiterating that Israel will not withdraw without a real peace deal—something Damascus cannot deliver while al-Sharaa flirts with U.S.-mediated normalization yet refuses to curb Iran's corridor.

In Judea and Samaria, a reservist was wounded by Palestinian fire during counterterror operations in Nablus, as overnight raids continue targeting Iranian-linked cells. Iran's foreign minister declared that Iran “will never accept zero enrichment,” that cooperating with the IAEA “will not include sites attacked,” and that enrichment remains a matter of “national pride.”

ASSESSMENT

The northern arena is no longer passive—it is a convergence zone where Hezbollah, Iran, and Hamas calibrate pressure while the U.S. attempts to restrain Israeli preemptive action. Hezbollah's systematic embedding of weapons under homes makes a short, intense air campaign more likely, especially as the militia accelerates re-infiltration south of the Litani. Iran's open IAEA defiance signals the strike-pause cycle is ending. Syria remains strategically frozen: Israel won't trade its security belt for Washington or Ankara photo opportunities. The combination of Axis reconstruction, UN paralysis, and Iranian nuclear defiance pushes the north toward a decision point diplomacy cannot indefinitely postpone.

ISF Drifts Toward Fantasy as Europe Trains ‘Gaza Police’ and Regional Rifts Reopen

Washington continues marketing an early-2026 International Stabilization Force while no training, funding, or troop commitments exist beyond polite invitations to Azerbaijan and Indonesia. Europe is preparing to train 3,000 “Gaza police” abroad—echoing the 1990s when imported security forces were killed by Hamas days after arrival in Gaza.

The U.S.-run CMCC in Kiryat Gat remains the only functioning multinational node and effectively serves as Gaza's interim administrator for humanitarian corridors. Diplomatic shifts elsewhere compete for attention: Jordan wants to revive the Abraham Accords water-solar deal; the U.S. will sell “downgraded” F-35s to Saudi Arabia (Israel purportedly retains its modified edge); and the Red Cross is set to regain access to Palestinian prisoners unless the blocking order is renewed.

ASSESSMENT

The ISF mirrors every other multinational Gaza experiment: impressive logos, no enforcement capacity, and diplomatic calendars divorced from ground reality. Europe training Gaza police while Hamas rebuilds battalions and embeds rockets is not stabilization—it repeats 1994’s failed pattern. Jordan’s economic track and Saudi F-35 compromise show regional states want alignment benefits without corresponding responsibilities. The only actual stabilizing force remains the IDF; Israel will treat the ISF as operational cover, not a substitute.

The Dossier They Don’t Want You to Read

TODAY’S extended analysis examines Judea and Samaria—the territory diplomacy calls the West Bank, examining settlers the UN portrays as aggressors, the terror economy the Palestinian Authority openly funds, and Iran’s plan to transform the ridge into a rocket corridor targeting Tel Aviv.

The piece covers ghost houses, fabricated villages, manufactured victimhood, and the Jewish communities maintaining the only barrier preventing the territory from becoming another Gaza.

Inside Israel

Reservist Politics Detonate Haredi Ultimatums and a New “No-Haredi Government” Party

The volatile draft crisis escalated sharply as UTJ leader Yitzhak Goldknopf issued a blunt ultimatum: “no Draft Law, no coalition, no budget.” He acknowledged on live radio that “not even an official draft exists” and mocked Religious Zionism’s polling decline while praising Ben-Gvir’s support.

Simultaneously, Yoaz Hendel formally launched HaMiluimnikim (the “Reservists” Party) with a platform including: government excluding Haredi and Arab factions, universal service as a voting and office-eligibility condition, and membership restricted solely to Israelis who performed military or national service. Hendel recently returned from reserve duty, preaching a government “led by those who showed up,” while 80,000 Haredi draft-eligible young men remain outside the IDF and the military faces a 12,000-troop manpower shortage.

The Smotrich reservist-credit law, the High Court’s looming draft-enforcement deadline, and the Goldknopf–Hendel collision have transformed the draft issue from policy into political reordering.

ASSESSMENT

The institutional dam has cracked. Haredi leaders threaten government collapse over a law they haven't written, while the country's reservists—who saved the state when leadership disappeared—organize to exclude draft-dodging parties entirely. For decades, politicians navigated around Haredi veto power; now they face a movement saying plainly: “If you don't serve, you don't lead.” Goldknopf's ultimatum exposes fundamental dysfunction—demanding maximal privileges without providing minimal responsibilities—while Hendel's party reveals public appetite for ending the national farce. Israel approaches its first genuine reckoning on burden equality. Avoidance is impossible; arithmetic and anger have converged.

Death Penalty Debate Advances in Heated Committee Meeting

Ben-Gvir advanced the death-penalty-for-terrorists bill in a contentious committee session, outlining a framework: lethal injection within 90 days, no appeals, majority decision, and applicability to terrorists murdering Jews. The coalition argues prison fails as punishment for jihadists expecting exchange, celebration, or rehiring by terror organizations—Israel has created a perverse incentive structure rewarding murder with future freedom.

Opposition erupted: MK Kariv was expelled for calling the bill “racist,” Arab MKs accused Ben-Gvir of fascism, and medical-association officials claimed doctors would refuse to administer injection. The same legal system lecturing the public on morality is collapsing under the Sde Teiman leak scandal, doctored evidence in the Netanyahu trial, and a MAG corps that destroyed its own credibility.

ASSESSMENT

Israel has used imprisonment as a holding pattern for terrorists fully expecting future release via lopsided hostage deals. That is logistics, not functional deterrence. A society that buried over 1,200 people and saw children taken as bargaining chips cannot pretend imprisonment represents meaningful punishment for men dreaming of martyrdom and seeking death. The bill resets incentive structure: murder an Israeli, die. That clarity is self-defense against evil.

Knesset Targets UNRWA; Universities Build What UNRWA Destroys

The Knesset advanced a bill to cut electricity and water to UNRWA-linked properties and seize two Jerusalem compounds—further steps evicting the agency that incubated Hamas cadres, concealed a data center under its Gaza headquarters, and housed hostages in its schools.

In New York, the UN General Assembly rubber-stamped UNRWA's mandate extension, but the “automatic majority” fractured: ten countries voted no (up from three), key donors abstained, and Foreign Minister Gideon Sa'ar hailed it as recognizing that UNRWA is “part of the problem, not the solution,” vowing Israel will not cooperate.

Simultaneously, another state arm builds an opposite model: Ben-Gurion University was celebrated in Philadelphia as the Negev's economic engine, with a record 20,000-student class, expanded medical programs, and new donor pipelines from American Jews exhausted with hostile campuses. That contrast sharpened as former hostage Guy Gilboa-Dalal detailed graphic sexual abuse by Hamas guards—echoing torture and rape patterns UNRWA abetted and whose NGO defenders still prefer denying.

ASSESSMENT

The domestic divide is stark. UNRWA manufactures permanent victimhood and operational space for terror. Israel builds universities anchoring an entire region's future. As torture testimonies accumulate, UNRWA's final moral alibi collapses, and the Knesset finally aligns law with reality: no utilities, no real estate, no diplomatic fig leaf for an agency structurally complicit in October 7.

Israel and the World

Hamas Turns Europe into a Rear Base — Mossad Turns On the Light

Mossad, working with Austria, Germany and other European partners, has dismantled a Hamas terror infrastructure across the continent: weapons caches in Vienna holding pistols, explosives and AK-47s; operatives arrested in Germany and London; and a broader wave of seizures and arrests in Germany and Austria targeting cells tasked to strike Israeli and Jewish targets “on command.”

Vienna guns were traced to Muhammad Na'im, son of senior Hamas politburo member Basem Na'im, after a meeting between father and son in Qatar, with Turkish-based Hamas operatives also involved—proving this is leadership-directed terror from Doha and likely Istanbul, not freelance radicalism. Mossad says it has quietly disrupted “dozens” of Hamas plots worldwide since October 7, while European services belatedly shut Hamas-front associations and mosques that raised money and recruits under NGO cover.

ASSESSMENT

“Political offices” in Qatar and Turkey are actually command centers for killing Jews in Europe. Updated raids in Germany and Austria confirm Hamas treated the EU as its rear logistics theater for years. The upside is that Mossad and serious European services finally treat Hamas as a transnational terror network on the IRGC model. The downside is October 7 and multiple weapons caches were required to produce this awareness. Israel must force a binary choice: either Doha and Ankara are formally designated as state sponsors and facilitators, or Europe continues discovering Hamas basements piecemeal while feigning surprise.

West's Split Screen: Punishing Hamas Fans, Platforming Holocaust Lies

In France, prosecutors folded Elon Musk's Grok chatbot into a probe of X after the AI promoted classic Holocaust denial to over a million users, claiming Auschwitz gas chambers were “for disinfection,” not industrial murder.

In Germany, the interior ministry backed Berlin's decision to strip citizenship from a naturalized Syrian who hailed Hamas gunmen as "heroes of Palestine" a day after obtaining his German passport, arguing that naturalization requires a value system explicitly protecting Jewish life.

In New York, that value system is under open assault: approximately 200 anti-Zionist protesters gathered outside Manhattan's Park East Synagogue—targeting a Nefesh B'Nefesh aliyah event—chanting "Death to the IDF," "Globalize the intifada," "Take another settler out," and explicitly stating their goal is "to make them scared." They berated Jewish attendees as "rapists," "pedophiles," and a "death cult," while Jewish counter-protesters and NYPD attempted to hold the line so worship and programming could proceed.

In the UK, polling reveals cognitive dissonance: only 9% of adults identify as "Zionists," yet 53% support "the right of Jewish people to have a nation in Israel"; 22% dislike "Zionists," but less than half that dislike "people who support the right of Jews to have a nation in Israel." Among self-described "progressive activists," hostility to "Zionists" is elevated, and both Israel-Palestine sides increasingly attribute the other's position to antisemitism or anti-Muslim hatred rather than policy disagreement.

ASSESSMENT

The Western battlefield in 2025 features an AI tool laundering Holocaust denial as "context" on one block and a synagogue physically encircled by people chanting for intifada and "Death to the IDF" on another while insisting they're just "anti-Zionist." Germany inches toward the obvious—if you celebrate Hamas, you don't deserve a German passport—while New York pretends that surrounding shuls and terrorizing congregants is mere "protest."

For Israel and the Jewish world, strategy is clear. Double down with allies tying citizenship and public order to rejecting jihadist Jew-hatred, and abandon vocabulary weaponized in activist circles: if "Zionist" now means "subhuman settler," you're inciting, not arguing. The imperative is locking in legal norms punishing Hamas-style admiration and forcing Western leaders to treat synagogue attacks as rehearsals, not rhetoric.

Briefly Noted

Frontline & Security

A new community, Shdema, was established overnight in eastern Gush Etzion on an old army base, creating a Jewish continuity belt between Gush Etzion and Jerusalem overlooking Bethlehem. Each caravan serves as both housing and strategic terrain.

Diplomacy & Geopolitics

The UN General Assembly's Human Rights Committee passed its annual Palestinian self-determination resolution 164-7, explicitly citing the ICJ opinion that Israeli presence in Judea and Samaria is “illegal” and must cease. It represents the standard pattern: a mechanical anti-Israel majority wraps maximalist Palestinian demands in rights language, then distributes them to the same UN system designing an ISF for Gaza while pretending Hamas and Iran aren’t operating the other half.

A Euronews investigation suggests the Palestinian Authority’s “pay-for-slay” Martyrs’ Fund remains operational via a new “economic empowerment” body, with supplemental, off-book stipends reaching convicted terrorists and even some Hamas prisoners. Abbas functions as a terror-salary laundering operation with European cover.

The IAEA Board is moving on a resolution demanding Iran grant inspectors access to its 60% enriched uranium stock, while Rafael Grossi publicly calls Tehran’s accusations against the agency “lies.” Iran attempts hiding weapons-grade proximity behind complaints about Israeli strikes.

Documents show Iranian scientists tied to SPND secretly visited Russia twice in 2024, meeting sanctioned laser and nuclear technology firms and seeking isotopes applicable to weapons design. This indicates Iran and Russia now openly cooperate on hard bomb-building components while everyone pretends the “pause” in enrichment signals repentance.

Culture, Religion & Society

An American Security Fund report states antisemites actively corrupt AI training data—especially on Wikipedia—so language models produce conspiracy theories, Holocaust denial and “Israel as evil” narratives at scale. AI amplifies Jew-hatred: contaminating several hundred documents doesn’t just mislead individual users, it reprograms the machine’s understanding of “truth.”

Elon Musk’s Grok bot falsely claimed Hebrew translation had been disabled on X to suppress violent content, echoing user conspiracy theories that the app was hiding “Jewish calls for genocide,” though translation remains functional. This exemplifies how AI doesn’t generate errors in isolation—it absorbs platform paranoia and redistributes it as authoritative “explanation,” converting rumors into “facts” for millions.

Domestic & Law

A former senior Health Ministry and Civil Administration official was arrested for forging over 100 “medical” entry permits that smuggled Palestinians into Israel and for selling dangerous medications using forged prescriptions.

Economy, Tech & Infrastructure

Approximately 250,000 Israelis along the Judea–Samaria barrier report nightly choking from Palestinian trash fires and sewage, with a Knesset hearing labeling it “environmental terrorism” and local leaders threatening to sue the state. This is what “no-man’s land” truly means: Palestinians burn garbage and dump sewage, Israeli ministries deflect accountability, and a quarter-million taxpayers purchase air purifiers because no one enforces basic law beyond the barrier.

Developments to Watch

Judea & Samaria

Raids Push Deeper Into Samaria – IDF forces conducted overnight operations in Qalqilya as part of wider raids already producing a wounded reservist in Nablus this week. LIKELY TO ESCALATE

Northern Front (Lebanon / Syria)

Signals of a Wider Lebanon Campaign – A very senior security official publicly warned a “significant operation against Hezbollah across Lebanon is about to begin,” explicitly stating Israel will not return to pre–October 7 status quo. Paired with Beit Lif exposures and ongoing strikes on weapons depots under homes, this reads less like bluff and more like strategic messaging preceding a short air war. LIKELY TO ESCALATE

Syrian Buffer Becomes Strategic Anchor – Netanyahu, Katz, Sa’ar, Zamir and Zini all appeared on the Syrian line to affirm the IDF’s nine forward positions and call their presence “immensely important.” That kind of full leadership bench on a cold hilltop signals to Washington and Damascus alike: Israel will not trade its security belt on the Golan for handshakes or photo-ops.

Gaza & Southern Theater

Khan Yunis Guns Tighten the Southern Belt – IDF heavy artillery targets southern Khan Yunis while UAVs and precision strikes hit Zeitoun, Shuja’iyya and Mawasi following repeated fire on forces inside the Yellow Line. LIKELY TO ESCALATE

Regional Axis (Iran, Houthis, Militias)

Tehran Draws a Line on Enrichment – Iran’s foreign minister declared “we will not accept zero enrichment,” called such an agreement “betrayal,” and stated IAEA cooperation will not include sites Israel and the US struck in June. That tells Vienna the game is repairs and delay, not rollback—so the next lever remaining for the West is pressure from the air, not additional paper. LIKELY TO ESCALATE

Mossad Takes the War to Hamas’s Rear Bases – Israeli intelligence, working with Austria, Germany and others, has been exposing and dismantling Hamas weapons caches and cells across Europe, including stashes in Vienna and arrests in Germany tied directly to Hamas leadership in Qatar and operatives in Turkey.

Diplomatic & Legal

Jordan Reopens the Water–Solar Track – Amman signals interest in restarting the Abraham-era prosperity project: 200 million cubic meters of Israeli desalinated water in exchange for 600 megawatts of Jordanian solar power financed by the UAE.

Saudi F-35 Deal Heads Into Fine-Print Phase – Washington will sell Riyadh F-35s stripped of some Israeli unique systems, while Jerusalem maintains its right to modify Adir jets without further US approval. The direction is fixed—Saudi stealth jets are coming—so real negotiations center on software walls, payload gaps, and how much of Israel’s long-range edge survives once a jihadi-supporting desert monarchy can fly low and invisible.

Home Front & Politics

Red Cross Access to Security Prisoners Back on the Clock – The wartime order blocking ICRC visits to Gaza and Judea–Samaria security prisoners expires at month’s end unless renewed. Renewing maintains leverage and information denial; allowing expiration reopens prisons to a body Hamas has repeatedly exploited for messaging and logistics.

Be’er Sheva Arson Spree Exposes Internal Soft Spots – Fire crews battled suspected arson in nine residential buildings in Be’er Sheva—electrical cabinets, lobbies and shelters were set alight—with approximately 15 residents, including infants, rescued from smoke and flames. Whether this is terror, crime, or one determined pyromaniac, it highlights how rapidly a home front already under missile threat can face mass-casualty risk from a committed saboteur.

Closing Analysis

THE Gaza ceasefire is no longer a debatable point—an eight-tube launcher sitting behind the Yellow Line reveals Hamas’s understanding of that boundary, and Mossad’s Vienna and Berlin work proves the same war is being prepared in Europe. Any ISF arriving in 2026 will inherit a theater where Hamas has already embedded itself and tested defenses; absent IDF-enforced disarmament before their arrival, they become another decorative acronym atop an armed enclave.

The north is sliding toward the decision discussed all week: either Israel executes a short, intense air campaign genuinely dismantling Hezbollah’s production and forward infrastructure, or we return to the pre–October 7 fantasy where rocket factories under apartments are merely “managed.” The senior security official discussing an operation “across Lebanon” isn’t speaking independently—he’s stating aloud what targeting documents already assume.

Israel’s interior is finally reacting to a decade of avoidance. The draft law transcends coalition detail; it’s now a regime question. A citizen army cannot survive 80,000 permanent exemptions and 600 career officers seeking the exit while courts order real enforcement and a new party states bluntly: “no service, no ballot.” That reckoning determines how long Israel can sustain fighting Iran’s axis across four simultaneous fronts.

The coming days reveal whether Washington insists on building policy around ceasefire fiction, or accepts that Hamas and Hezbollah have advanced to the next round; whether Jerusalem endorses more “process” or starts acting as the only responsible actor in the room; and whether Israel’s leadership possesses the resolve to tell its own public that burden equality is no longer rhetoric but a survival requirement. The underlying rule persists: Israel enforces reality; everyone else edits the press release.
