ISRAEL BRIEF

Sunday, November 30

The tunnels are collapsing, the north is ticking, and the legal system is learning that Israel can't fight Iran with half its institutions stuck in 2019.

◇ URIEL ZEHAVER

THE BOTTOM LINE When municipalities start erasing Jewish names from parks and cutting ties with Israeli cities under fabricated genocide rhetoric, they're broadcasting to their own tiny Jewish communities that their story no longer belongs in the public square. None of this changes a single IDF targeting decision in Rafah or a single Hezbollah launch site, but it does map where Jews and Israelis can expect fair dealing and where they should expect open hostility dressed up as virtue. Israel should keep treating these local gestures as early-warning lights, not as strategic earthquakes: deepen ties with governments and cities that honor shared history and security, and be unafraid to say out loud when others are sliding from criticism of Israel into good old-fashioned Jew-baiting.

Israel Brief: Sunday, November 30

Subtitle: The tunnels are collapsing, the north is ticking, and the legal system is learning that Israel can't fight Iran with half its institutions stuck in 2019.

Shavua tov, friends.

Rafah is coughing up starving Hamas fighters as the underground grid buckles. The Syrian line just turned kinetic eight kilometers over the border. Hezbollah keeps promising revenge but can't decide whether dignity or survival matters more. Judea and Samaria is running on combat logic, not Oslo nostalgia. And inside Israel, the political, legal, and military echelons are wrestling over who actually leads when the rockets come.

Flash Brief

- Rafah: Four more tunnel fugitives — including the son of Razi Hamed and a battalion commander — were killed as the grid collapses and dozens remain trapped. See The War Today.
- Lebanon/Syria: Hezbollah vows retaliation while UNIFIL leaks intel and Israel reinforces the Hermon line after a Beit Jinn ambush wounded seven. See The War Today & Developments to Watch.
- Judea & Samaria: IDF encircles the Tammun-Tubas belt, demolishes Jenin terror structures, and busts Turkey-Jordan gun pipelines feeding the ridge. See The War Today.
- Iran / Axis: Tehran accelerates weapons to Hezbollah, smuggling into PA zones, and maritime signaling, while Houthis hype a “Golan” front. See Developments to Watch & Israel and the World.
- Inside Israel: Netanyahu's pardon request moves into formal review; law enforcement arrests far-left instigator calling for violent overthrow; Android ban and Morpheus AI enter force. See Inside Israel.
- Diplomacy: Germany resumes arms sales and sends its chancellor to Jerusalem; Qatar pushes “phase two” while bodies are still withheld; Europe spins deeper into soft hate. See Israel and the World.
- Aviation: Global A320 grounding may disrupt Israel's flight corridors this week even as El Al remains unaffected. See Developments to Watch.

Israel is engaging with reality while its enemies — and too many allied capitals — cling to illusions. Rafah isn't “paused,” it's being hollowed out. Syria isn't quiet, it's becoming Iran's export lane. Hezbollah's delay isn't restraint, it's weakness. And inside Israel, the old bureaucratic reflexes — delay, defer, deny — are finally being dragged into the daylight.

The War Today

Syria Turns Hot While Hezbollah Pretends Control

The Syrian side of Mount Hermon is an Iran–Hezbollah– Hamas staging belt wearing the new regime’s badge. A reserve paratrooper force from the 55th Brigade pushed 8 km into Syria to capture two Jama’a al-Islamiya operatives long tracked for planting explosives and firing missiles. As they extracted, jihadists opened fire from 200 meters, wounding seven Israelis—three seriously—before the unit eliminated multiple attackers and extracted the detainees into Israel for interrogation. Intelligence now links the cell not only to Sunni jihadists but directly to Sharaa’s General Intelligence Directorate, which has also been targeting Druze civilians in Khader alongside IDF patrols. Meanwhile, Israel is reinforcing along the Syrian line, sending “serious messages” to Damascus, and preparing response packages after interrogations revealed coordination between Iran, Hezbollah, and Hamas networks operating under regime cover. Simultaneously, Druze leaders from Israel warn that the new Syrian regime—headed up by a jihadi in a suit—is overseeing a sectarian massacre involving rape, executions, beheadings, and the abduction of hundreds. The Druze openly plead for U.S. guarantees as Trump courts the same regime responsible for the killings.

ASSESSMENT

The northern front is now fully bifurcated: Hezbollah rebuilds west of the Hermon while the Sharaa regime greenlights Iran’s jihadist auxiliaries on the east. Beit Jinn shattered the illusion of “quiet” and confirmed that Syria is becoming a mirror of pre-war Lebanon—a proxy battlespace for Iran with minorities used as bait. Israel now faces a two-front escalation that converges at the Golan, and the only stabilizing mechanism left is preemptive Israeli action. Hezbollah’s delayed response and Syria’s open pipeline to Tehran guarantee this front doesn’t cool—it detonates on Iran’s timetable unless Israel moves first.

Lebanon Scrambles as UNIFIL Crumbles and Hezbollah Demands Revenge

Hezbollah’s Naim Qassem publicly vowed retaliation for Israel’s elimination of his chief of staff, Haytham Tabataba’i, telling Beirut to “prepare for war” while simultaneously welcoming the Pope’s visit as political camouflage. Behind the rhetoric, Lebanon’s army rushed journalists to abandoned underground Hezbollah sites near Zibqin—clinic tunnels, ventilated shafts, food stores, launch pits—claiming progress toward the U.S.-backed disarmament plan, even as Hezbollah rejects the plan outright, demands Israel withdraw from the five strategic hilltops it seized, and quietly moves fighters north from Syria. The IDF is unconvinced: intelligence reports that UNIFIL personnel are filming Israeli positions, labeling Israel “the enemy” in official documents, and illegally giving material to Hezbollah—a long-suspected pattern now treated as fact. Israeli officers say UNIFIL’s presence “hinders freedom of action” and may already be compromising operations. Meanwhile, American officials delivered a blunt warning through Beirut: disarm Hezbollah or Israel escalates after the Pope departs. Inside the chaos, Iran accelerates weapons transfers to Hezbollah via Dubai, increases smuggling into Judea and Samaria, and reportedly launches ballistic tests framed as retaliation for “Israeli bases” in Iraq.

ASSESSMENT

Washington's December 31 ultimatum is the key factor: disarm or expect Israeli action unconstrained by "previously avoided targets." With UNIFIL withdrawing, Hezbollah vowing revenge, and Iran accelerating armament to preempt an Israeli strike, the northern front is on a timer. When the Pope is wheels up, the margin for miscalculation collapses.

Rafah Collapses While Ankara Sneaks Its Proxies Back In

In Rafah, the IDF killed four more tunnel fugitives overnight—suspected to include the son of senior Hamas figure Razi Hamed and the Jenineh Battalion commander—bringing the three-week tally to over thirty eliminated and eight captured as the underground grid collapses. Dozens remain trapped without air or food. IAF and ground units also eliminated three terrorists who violated the ceasefire by crossing the Yellow Line. Additional fighters were hit as they approached IDF positions on Saturday. Israeli forces uncovered further smuggling attempts: a drone carrying long-barrel weapons, drug and ammunition caches, and infiltration attempts from the Jordan Valley all intercepted. At the same time, Turkish IHH—the same organization banned in Israel for equipping Hamas and tied to the Union of the Good—now operates openly in Gaza under humanitarian cover, distributing supplies and clearing rubble in a space where Hamas is clawing back civil control. COGAT, in parallel, opened a 150-bed field hospital with 200 staff, now treating over 1,000 patients a day, even as families of murdered hostages demand that no “phase two” reconstruction proceed while bodies remain in Gaza.

ASSESSMENT

Hamas and its patrons are racing to rebuild political and logistical influence via Turkish proxies like IHH. The political battlefield is being infiltrated by Ankara, Doha and humanitarian laundering. Israel must finish the underground campaign before any “Green Rafah” optics give Hamas oxygen.

Inside Israel

Bibi Pushes the Legal Guild Into Its First Real Test in Decades

PM Benjamin Netanyahu's unprecedented clemency request hit the system like a controlled detonation: a mid-trial pardon appeal that bypasses the normal “wait for a verdict” choreography and lands directly on President Herzog's desk. The machinery is already in motion — the Justice Ministry's Pardons Department is compiling its mandatory review, Herzog's legal advisors are studying the file, and Israel Katz moved immediately to back the request as a national-unity necessity in wartime, echoing Trump's public line that Israel needs a single, steady hand at the helm. The opposition, predictably, is demanding humiliation rituals — confession, remorse, political suicide — conditions no president has ever required, least of all in a state whose security depends on continuity. Amid all this, the legal establishment is the one absorbing pressure. Baharav-Miara is isolated after the High Court distanced itself from her on the Tomer Yerushalmi saga. Senior jurists privately admit the Bus 300 precedents allow pre-verdict pardons. And Herzog, who has long sought a political off-ramp to the judicial war, now has one. The subtext is obvious: end the lawfare escalation and let the elected government steer the country through the most dangerous strategic environment since 1973.

ASSESSMENT

Netanyahu didn't just flip the board, he exposed the game. Instead of waiting to be cornered over political nothing-burgers — gifts from friends and alleged "favorable coverage" that every normal human ecosystem runs on, while his predecessors swam in envelopes of cash and were treated as business as usual. He forced the core question: who governs Israel in a national emergency, elected leadership or a legal caste that decided this prime minister must go and then went hunting for charges? These indictments are not about graft on a scale that endangers the state. They're a lawfare project dressed up as purity politics. The answer to his pardon request will decide not just his future but whether Israel can field a coherent government for the remainder of the war. Granting it now is not a personal favor, it's an act of national stabilization and an admission that the judicial system is not supposed to be a substitute for the ballot box.

Law Enforcement Finally Treats Incitement as Incitement — Amid Leftist Panic

Police arrested anti-government agitator Yolanda Yavor after she publicly called for a "real rebellion," urged followers to overthrow the "traitor Netanyahu" by force, and declared that "dictators are not overthrown at the ballot box." This was a direct call for political violence from an academic who has repeatedly crossed that line—including posts calling for arson attacks on officials' homes. At the same time, Haifa police entered a Standing Together event and ordered activists to remove a sign demanding Israel withdraw from Gaza — not because of content policing, but because the organizers advertised a political rally under the guise of a cultural assembly, triggering public-order authority. Gvir's policing doctrine — law applies equally, threats are handled immediately, and political violence is not tolerated as "activism" — is starting to bite. The very same camp that screamed for "rule of law" during right-wing protests is now accusing police of "intimidation" for enforcing existing statutes.

ASSESSMENT

Calls for violence from either extreme—left or right—are beyond the expected standards of a civilized society. This is the first time in over a decade that law enforcement is applying the same incitement standards to the radical left that were routinely used against the right. The legal architecture never changed — only the willingness to enforce it. The government's insistence that officers stop treating left-wing mobilization as sacred theater is reshaping the internal arena and restoring deterrence where it was long eroded. The country is safer for it.

Security Establishment Slams the Door on Iran's Judea-Samaria Project

Over the past week, coordinated IDF-Shin Bet-Police raids across Judea and Samaria produced over 40 arrests, the killing of three active terrorists, the seizure of dozens of rifles and pistols, and the discovery of potassium stockpiles, explosives labs, and Hamas-linked observation centers in Timon, Fara, Tammoun, and the Hebron belt. Forces confiscated tens of thousands of shekels channeled through the Turkey–Negev–Jordan pipeline now known to be partly directed by an Israeli Arab operative working from Turkey. Commando units neutralized arms traffickers in Tulkarm, dismantled lathes in Hebron, and arrested planners of attacks on Jewish communities near Jerusalem. While the IDF tears out the infrastructure, the PA marks “Partition Plan Day” by demanding a retreat to the 1947 map — a cartoonish fantasy that deliberately erases Jewish sovereignty and signals Ramallah’s alignment with Hamas’s maximalist program. Against this backdrop, Smotrich’s policy of anchoring Israeli jurisdiction on the ridge — legalizing communities, defining boundaries, and halting PA land grabs — complements the military pressure. Meanwhile, national morale surged as hostage survivor Yosef-Haim Ohana returned home after 738 days, publicly calling to bring home Ran Gvili, the last Israeli hostage still held in Gaza.

ASSESSMENT

The ridge is no longer a “West Bank” debate; it is the forward line of defense between Iran’s terror corridors and Israel’s coastal plain. The combination of the government’s governance doctrine and internal security crackdown with the IDF’s multi-brigade tempo is collapsing the Iran-PA-Hamas attempt to recreate Gaza on the hilltops. This alignment — political sovereignty plus operational aggression — is the first formula in years that actually works.

Israel and the World

Germany Lands While Others Scream From the Shore

German Chancellor Friedrich Merz will visit Israel on December 6, meet PM Netanyahu, and stop at Yad Vashem — the first elected leader of a major European country to show his face on the ground in Israel in over a year — days after Berlin moved to resume weapons exports that had been frozen since August over Gaza. Germany will link future deliveries to ceasefire “stability” and humanitarian aid, and Merz will keep grumbling about “settler violence,” but its clear: Berlin still sees Israel as a front-line ally, not a pariah, and is putting actual hardware behind that judgment while much of the EU settles for angry press releases.

ASSESSMENT

In a Europe that loves performative concern, Germany is quietly choosing strategy. You don’t restart arms shipments and send your chancellor into a war-zone capital if you’ve bought the “genocide” script. You do it because you know who holds the line against Iran, Hezbollah and Hamas. Israel should treat Merz’s visit as what it is — proof that the serious half of Europe is still in play — and deepen ties with Berlin while letting the Dublin and Sopot crowd enjoy their symbolic boycotts in splendid irrelevance.

Climate Mascots, Fake Divestment and Lawyers for Hamas

In Italy, Greta Thunberg and UN “expert” Francesca Albanese headlined anti-Israel actions that shut down transport across multiple cities and helped cancel more than 70 flights — an energy-wasting stunt branded as moral courage and aimed at punishing an elected government that backs Israel. In the US, North Carolina activists declared “VICTORY: NC DIVESTS FROM ISRAEL!!” after the state sold $6.7 million in Israel bonds, only for the Treasury to explain it was a routine portfolio rebalance and that the pension fund still holds Israeli paper, echoing similar BDS “wins” in Minnesota that turned out to be basic asset management. In Britain, over 100 lawyers — including seven King’s Counsel — signed a letter backing solicitor Farhad Ansari, who is trying to de-proscribe Hamas on the claim it poses “no threat to the UK people,” even after 18 Britons were murdered on October 7 and former hostages detailed their abuse. His firm has eulogized Hamas leaders and marched for Hezbollah while marketing itself as a neutral defender of the rule of law.

ASSESSMENT

This is what the information war looks like in peacetime clothing: climate celebrities turning ports into props, BDS inflating bookkeeping into “divestment,” and elite lawyers laundering a jihadist militia as a misunderstood political actor. The good news is that treasuries, home offices, and most regulators still quietly refuse to follow them over the cliff. Israel’s task is to help the grown-ups in these systems. Expose the gap between activist theater and policy reality, and make sure budgets, terror lists and security cooperation stay anchored in facts, not in Instagram narratives.

Dublin and Sopot Turn on Their Jews, Not Just on Israel

In Dublin, the city council is preparing to strip Herzog Park — named in 1995 for Chaim Herzog (the Belfast-born Israeli president, British Army officer who fought the Nazis, and son of Ireland’s first chief rabbi) of its name, with replacement options like “Hind Rajab Park” or “Free Palestine Park” on the table right beside Dublin’s only Jewish primary and secondary school. President Isaac Herzog calls it “shameful and disgraceful,” Irish Jewish leaders warn it’s an attempt to erase their own history, and even former justice minister Alan Shatter says the council has gone “full-on Nazi” in spirit by targeting a Jewish name tied to Irish public life. In Poland, the Baltic resort city of Sopot just tore up a 30-year twin-city agreement with Ashkelon on the grounds it cannot be linked to a town near Gaza “where genocide is taking place,” after Amnesty-branded activists and a local councillor pushed the move as proof Sopot is “a city of human rights” — provided, of course, those humans don’t wear kippot nor live in southern Israel.

ASSESSMENT

When municipalities start erasing Jewish names from parks and cutting ties with Israeli cities under fabricated genocide rhetoric, they're broadcasting to their own tiny Jewish communities that their story no longer belongs in the public square. None of this changes a single IDF targeting decision in Rafah or a single Hezbollah launch site, but it does map where Jews and Israelis can expect fair dealing and where they should expect open hostility dressed up as virtue. Israel should keep treating these local gestures as early-warning lights, not as strategic earthquakes: deepen ties with governments and cities that honor shared history and security, and be unafraid to say out loud when others are sliding from criticism of Israel into good old-fashioned Jew-baiting.

Briefly Noted

Frontline & Security

- Ynet: Dozens of jihadists ambushed an IDF reserve unit in Beit Jinn, wounding six soldiers after the force arrested a terror-cell leader planning attacks on the Golan. The clash shows how deeply Iran's franchises are embedding in post-Assad Syria — and why Israel is now treating the Golan with raids instead of wishful thinking.
- Jerusalem Post: Qatar demanded Israel proceed to “phase two” of the Gaza deal even though Hamas still withholds the bodies of Ran Gvili and Thai citizen Sudthisak Rinthalak. It's a reminder that Doha runs cover for Hamas, not hostages, and will happily rewrite its own agreement if it helps protect the terror network it bankrolls.
- Jerusalem Post (UNRWA / Deradicalization): An op-ed details Gaza schoolbooks praising Hitler, glorifying martyrdom, and teaching children to “shoot the Jews,” with UNRWA teachers celebrating October 7 in Telegram groups. The evidence reinforces what the battlefield already shows — Gaza doesn't need reconstruction yet. It needs de-indoctrination and demilitarization before anything else.

Diplomacy & Geopolitics

- JNS: An analysis warns that “nonviolent” Islamism is colonizing American civic life — from Dearborn school boards to university networks — prompting Texas to classify CAIR and the Muslim Brotherhood as terror groups under state law. The piece highlights a growing split in the US: some states are finally recognizing ideological extremism as a political project, while federal institutions pretend it's just “cultural expression.”
- Jerusalem Post: Tunisia sentenced opposition leaders — including a former intelligence chief — to 5 to 45 years in prison after Saied's regime accused them of destabilization. North Africa's “Arab Spring success story” now resembles every other dictatorship in the neighborhood, with repression framed as counterterrorism while real jihadist movements grow in the vacuum.

- Israel National News: Germany's far-right AfD launched a new youth wing as 25,000 protesters clashed with police outside, prompting water cannons and injuries. The rise of AfD — extremist, revisionist, and already Germany's largest opposition party — underscores how quickly European politics are destabilizing while lecturing Israel about "extremism."

Economy, Tech & Infrastructure

- Jerusalem Post: A media-tech op-ed argues AI is now central to the information war, with bots, fake videos and Qatari-funded content farms shaping global opinion faster than Israel can fact-check. The takeaway is blunt: Israel isn't just fighting Hamas in tunnels — it's fighting Iran, Qatar and Turkey in algorithms.
- JNS: A new report found Instagram's algorithm promoting accounts selling Nazi, racist and antisemitic merchandise, generating an estimated $1.3 million in sales. Meta's weakened moderation isn't a glitch — it's a business model that monetizes hate while leaving Jewish communities to clean up the fallout.

Developments to Watch

Northern Front (Lebanon / Syria)

- Hezbollah's Response Clock Compresses — Hezbollah chief Naim Qassem again vowed retaliation for Tabataba'i's killing, while Israeli channels report U.S. officials quietly telling Beirut that escalation is "imminent" unless disarmament advances. Israel is positioning for a post-Pope window where Hezbollah must either strike symbolically or accept generational humiliation. LIKELY TO ESCALATE
- Israel Reinforces the Syrian Line — Foreign reports show significant IDF reinforcements along the Syrian frontier after interrogations revealed direct coordination among Iran, Hezbollah, Hamas and Sharaa's intelligence services. With Beit Jinn exposing how quickly "quiet" can collapse, Israel is bracing for multi-node attacks on Hermon outposts.
- UNIFIL Moves From Obstruction to Liability — Senior IDF officers accuse UNIFIL of documenting Israeli positions and leaking imagery to Hezbollah, including a formal UNIFIL memo referring to Israel as "the enemy." This accelerates UNIFIL's delegitimization and raises the odds Israel will ignore or override its presence in the next combat phase.

Gaza & Southern Theater

- Rafah Kill Box Tightens — IDF troops eliminated four more tunnel fugitives overnight — suspected to include the East Rafah battalion commander and the son of Razi Hamed — as over 30 are now confirmed dead trying to escape the collapsing grid. The pocket is disintegrating, forcing Hamas leadership westward and increasing the risk of breakout attempts. LIKELY TO ESCALATE

- Smuggling Attempts Multiply — A drone infiltrated from the west carrying long-barrel weapons, and scans across the corridor uncovered drugs and ammunition in old smuggling zones. This surge in cross-line trafficking suggests Hamas factions and crime clans are racing to rebuild logistics before “Green Rafah” hardens Israeli control.
- Yellow Line Pressure Continues — Multiple suspects approached or crossed the demarcation near Kerem Shalom over Shabbat and were eliminated immediately under standing orders. Expect continued probing as Hamas tests IDF fatigue and looks for a narrative breach it can sell as Israeli “violations.”

Judea & Samaria

- Jenin Camp Infrastructure Gets Erased — The IDF approved demolitions for 24 structures in the Jenin camp after finding an explosives lab, ammunition, and IED stocks embedded in residential blocks. This is the opening salvo of a longer campaign to break the Jenin–Tulkarm–Tubas arc before it matures into a battalion-scale threat. LIKELY TO ESCALATE
- Northern Samaria Raids Expand Again — Commando units raided Timon and Fara, seizing weapons, incitement materials, drones, and an observation command center, with over ten terrorists arrested. Iran’s effort to build a “Gaza Ridge” infrastructure is still alive, forcing Israel to sustain tempo rather than declare victory.

Regional Axis (Iran, Houthis, Militias)

- Iran Accelerates Arms Race Under Pressure — Israeli security sources report Tehran is speeding up weapons transfers to Hezbollah and smuggling routes into PA areas, fearing an Israeli preemptive strike. This is Tehran’s tell — when it rushes supply chains, it believes time is working against it. LIKELY TO ESCALATE
- IRGC Maritime Signaling Expands — The IRGC seized an Eswatinian-flagged vessel in the Gulf with 350,000 liters of alleged “smuggled fuel,” amid contradictory reports of missile launches toward Iraqi Kurdistan. Iran is stress-testing Western and Israeli detection thresholds while pretending retaliation it hasn’t actually executed.

Diplomatic & Legal

- Qatar Pushes Phase Two Without Hostages — Doha declared Israel must not delay the next stage of the ceasefire over two missing bodies, prompting immediate pushback from the Hostages Forum. Qatar is telegraphing that it intends to protect Hamas’s political horizon even if it means breaking its own agreement.
- Airspace and Aviation Disruption Likely — A global grounding order for Airbus A320-family jets — widely used on Israel routes — may trigger cancellations and delays across European carriers this week. Israel’s aviation flow could face temporary disruption even as El Al and domestic affiliates remain unaffected.

Home Front & Politics

- Far-Left Incitement Finally Crosses a Red Line — Police located and arrested lecturer-activist Yolanda Yabur after she called for overthrowing the “traitor” Netanyahu by force and urged followers to abandon ballots for rebellion. This is the test case for enforcing incitement laws equally across the spectrum, not just against the right.
- Security Posture Adjusts Near Gaza — Alert squads in towns 4–7 km from Gaza will see reduced reserve-day allocations, leaving only chiefs and deputies on pay. The shift risks morale in communities closest to the fence unless paired with visible reinforcement from standing forces.

Inside Israel, the reckoning that was delayed for two years is finally being confronted. Leadership is choosing whether to keep living in the world that produced October 7 or the one that prevents the next version of it.

Across Gaza, Syria, Lebanon, and Judea and Samaria, Iran pushes hardware and ideology through every channel it can find. Hezbollah’s pride buys it time, but not much — the December deadline hangs over Beirut like a storm. Rafah’s fugitives are the clearest signal of all: Hamas is starving underground, not negotiating from strength. The IDF is finding success, may it find more success and more support—the West is counting on it.
