ISRAEL BRIEF

Tuesday, June 23

Tehran collects the oil, the strait, and a Lebanon seat before an inspector reaches a centrifuge, and the IDF's orders in the north shrink to a chief-of-staff signature.

◇ URIEL ZEHAVI

THE BOTTOM LINE A sitting mayor, a congressman's challenger, and a coffee counter are all running the same operation — turn “Zionist” or “AIPAC” into the permission slip, then act on the Jew it points to. The vocabulary is doing the sorting the voters will ratify, and the institutions built to catch it are arriving after the round is called. This is the partisan sort reaching the words themselves, the warning we filed before the election that an antizionist administration would set the terms on which Jew-hatred gets named — and the same week a Brooklyn barista decided a Jewish congressman's cash was dirty is the week the question stopped being rhetorical for the diaspora's largest community.

EIGHTEEN hours at Lake Lucerne settled which side the memorandum was written for. Iran banks the oil license, the frozen billions, and a seat at the Lebanon table before a single inspector walks a damaged site, and the only enforcement clause left standing is a strike-restart threat the regime spent the same afternoon daring Washington to use. We have watched the decision to fire slide off Jerusalem's desk all spring. This week it lands on a room Jerusalem is not allowed to enter, with the IDF's southern-Lebanon orders cut to firing on an immediate threat and phoning the chief of staff for anything past it.

BELOW: the order that contradicts Netanyahu's "no restrictions" promise word for word, the seat Iran just claimed on Israel's northern border, and why the Shin Bet chief is looking south while everyone else watches Iran.

Free readers get the wire. Paid readers get the read.

Every economic item Washington front-loaded reaches Tehran now. Every constraint on Iran waits on an inspection regime the regime has already refused. That logic runs straight through the north, where the order narrowing the IDF to immediate-threat fire arrived as Netanyahu, Katz, and Zamir swore the army has full freedom of action. The gap between the promise and the order is the whole story, and Hezbollah is mapping the commanders' tents while it widens.

The War Today

GENEVA HANDS IRAN THE OIL, THE STRAIT, AND A LEBANON SEAT

Eighteen hours of talks at Lake Lucerne closed with Tehran's negotiators projecting confidence and Washington claiming a foundation. The Treasury issued a sixty-day general license authorizing the legal sale of Iranian crude through August 21, the first sanctioned path for Iranian oil since 1979, and the regime expects billions in revenue against a planned $500 million test purchase from funds parked in Qatar. Vance announced Iran had agreed to readmit IAEA inspectors. Within a day Baghaei said Tehran would allow no inspectors at the sites the war damaged, denied the American-crops claim Trump had floated, and named the Lebanon ceasefire as a clause of the memorandum. Ghalibaf, the parliament speaker now leading the next round, said Iran will administer the Strait of Hormuz and it will not return to pre-war status. More than 400 ships wait off the strait, the US routing them up the Omani coast under air cover while Iran threatens penalties on the same vessels, and Tehran heads to Oman to negotiate the toll the reopening was sold to remove. Trump's enforcement line is that he will "do what I have to do" if Iran walks. Hegseth is on Capitol Hill asking a skeptical Congress for roughly $80 billion to fund the war the memorandum was meant to end.

ASSESSMENT

The strike-restart threat is the only enforcement clause left, which is why the regime can deny the inspection commitment regardless of Vance's announcement and still pay no price. Iran says it will toll the strait it just agreed to open, and the 400 hulls riding at anchor are reading the page more honestly than the principal who signed it.

WASHINGTON NARROWS THE IDF'S LEBANON ORDERS TO THE CHIEF-OF-STAFF

IDF commanders in southern Lebanon have been cut to firing only on an immediate threat, and anything beyond it now needs the chief of staff's direct approval, with any demolition inside the security zone barred without senior sign-off. Netanyahu, Katz, and Zamir issued a joint statement insisting the army has "no restrictions" and "full freedom of action." Hmm. Qatar and Pakistan unveiled a Lebanon deconfliction cell built into the US-Iran track: a direct Washington-Tehran channel with Lebanon at the table. And Israel, France, and UNIFIL excluded. Vance asked Israel to answer Hezbollah attacks "in the context of a conversation" and backed Iran's role in ending the war. Division 146 found Hezbollah running night observation and radio collection to fix the locations of IDF senior command, the surveillance grid going back up as the orders narrow. The army neared the end of its clearing mission and is set to recommend the cabinet push the line deeper into Lebanon even as Washington negotiates a pullback. The standby squads mobilized at the war's start are released next week. The fifth round of Jerusalem-Beirut talks opens in Washington today.

ASSESSMENT

Absorb the next round and phone the chief of staff before shooting back. That's not much of a deterrence posture anymore. A standing body seating Hezbollah's own patron to call the freezes on the the IDF is bad news all around. Katz can promise no restrictions all he likes, and as we've tracked the promise and the order have not matched for a month now. The men on the line know which one they answer to, and Hezbollah is mapping their commanders' tents in the meantime.

ISRAEL FIGHTS THE WAR IT OWNS WHERE THE MEMORANDUM CANNOT REACH

The IDF and Shin Bet kept enforcing the disarmament the truce never delivered. A precise strike in northern Gaza eliminated Sabai Abu Hasna, the Nukhba operative who infiltrated on October 7, held Omer Shem Tov hostage, and recently planted charges against troops. The same strike killed Ahmed Washah, a Hamas sniper who doubled as an Al Jazeera photojournalist. Southern Command under Maj. Gen. Yaniv Asor now holds roughly 70 percent of Gaza and is running three tracks at once — the Yellow Line, expanded control and defensive works, and the proposed Rafah “green city.” Officers along the line say the open-fire procedure has quietly softened from shooting adults who cross to a suspect-arrest drill ending at most in shots to the legs. The IDF calls it a clarification. The officers call it the top of a slope and warn of “October 7 on steroids.” In Judea and Samaria, troops have seized more than 240 firearms hidden in civilian areas since January and killed two terrorists hurling Molotov cocktails at Karmei Tzur in Gush Etzion. And Shin Bet chief David Zini has told his senior staff he treats Eilat as the likeliest site of the next October 7, a Houthi strike on the isolated city wedged between the Jordanian and Egyptian borders and the sea, more than a thousand miles from the Yemeni launch sites. A security-forces drill in the gulf airspace is set for tomorrow.

ASSESSMENT

Every name the targeting cell reaches in Gaza answers the same question eighteen months on — the men who carried out October 7 and the men rebuilding to do it again are the same roster, and the strike on a Hamas sniper drawing an Al Jazeera paycheck is the press-credential laundering operation made literal. Again. Zini, for all the media is mocking him, is just looking at the seam the war left open while every senior decision-maker was distracted with more urgent fires elsewhere [the alternative being a commission of inquiry in 2028 asking why no one looked south].

Inside Israel

THE STATE AGREES NOT TO ARREST DRAFT EVADERS ON ELECTION DAY

Justice Noam Sohlberg, in his capacity as chair of the Central Elections Committee, reached an understanding with Attorney General Baharav-Miara and Police Commissioner Levi that no enforcement operations against draft evaders will run on election day, after the committee’s director general acknowledged that haredi evaders fear leaving home to vote lest they be arrested on the way to the ballot box. The understanding lands as the haredi boycott of coalition legislation enters its second week, with nearly every bill pulled from the Knesset plenum, Deri and the United Torah Judaism parties withholding their votes until the arrest-freeze measure and Basic Law: Torah Study advance, and the dissolution timetable now pointing at October 20. The street has not waited for the legislation. Rioters in Beit Shemesh pelted police with rocks and torched a police cruiser, and the State Attorney indicted Yosef Friedman, 46, for setting three fires beside the Beit Shemesh station during an earlier riot over a yeshiva student’s arrest. Soldiers and haredi protesters clashed outside Military Prison 10 under banners reading “Release Sohlberg’s hostages.” In Arad, after Gur Hasidim staged a procession for a congregant arrested on suspicion of abusing his children, former mayor Nissan Ben Hamo called for an “urban intifada” against the city’s haredi residents, and Goldknopf asked the commissioner to open a criminal investigation into him.

ASSESSMENT

Strip the procedural language and the arrangement is an enforcement holiday negotiated between the three offices that spent the spring insisting enforcement was a matter of law and not politics — the body that was supposed to audit burden-not-shared brokering the exemption it claims it cannot legislate [the rule of law taking a day off so the men who broke it can vote for the men who let them]. Goldknopf asking the police to investigate a call to violence is the leader of the community that beat secular residents in Arad and shut down central Israel discovering the value of the rule of law the week his parties need it.

NETANYAHU REACHES TO HAND-PICK THE LIKUD SLATE AS THE TERM RUNS OUT

Netanyahu is moving to hold Likud primaries on condition that he receive eight to ten reserved slots for handpicked candidates, his preferred route after resistance inside the party to his broader plan to replace the primary with a selection committee — every arrangement still requiring approval by the Likud central committee in a secret ballot. MK David Bitan, who with Haim Katz has led the resistance, called the reserved-slots demand “a political exercise.” The slate fight runs alongside the legal-guild docket the coalition wants settled before the Knesset dissolves: an expanded panel of Amit, Sohlberg, Barak-Erez, Kanfi-Steinitz and Ronen now sits on the petitions to annul Rabilio’s election as State Comptroller, the full bench has signaled it may strike the Judicial Selection Committee law that takes effect only in the next Knesset, and Netanyahu used a session of his own trial to tell the judges the prosecution had “set a trap” in Case 2000.

ASSESSMENT

A prime minister seeking ten reserved slots and the power to seat his own list without a primary is consolidating the one institution an election cannot take from him before an election he may not win — the party, locked down from the inside while the coalition’s hold on everything outside the party comes apart. The committee weighing whether to strike a Basic Law it concedes does not bind the current Knesset, and the office that timed its Comptroller petition to land days before dissolution, are the legal guild reaching for the seats the ballot box is about to reshuffle, betting that whoever holds the Comptroller’s pen and staffs the next bench outlasts whoever wins in October.

Israel and the World

RUBIO FLIES TO THE GULF TO SELL A DEAL ITS ALLIES REJECT

Rubio lands in the United Arab Emirates today and goes on to Kuwait and Bahrain to talk the Gulf Cooperation Council into the US-Iran framework, the one the GCC capitals fear hands Tehran the region. The objections are specific: no ceiling on Iran’s ballistic missiles, a proposed $300 billion reconstruction fund, and clauses that widen Iranian reach over the oil lanes through Hormuz. All six monarchies gave Washington some logistical backing during the four-month war and all six took Iranian fire for it. And several are privately telling US officials they are surprised an interim deal opens a door to US normalization with the Shi'ite power they treat as their main adversary.

ASSESSMENT

Washington is sending its top diplomat to reassure the allies it did not consult before signing. States do not pay protection to a loser, and capitals that watched Iran emerge war-strengthened are reallocating toward Tehran, not toward the Accords frozen at current membership. Rubio can sell the missiles and the reconstruction fund as concessions worth swallowing, but the base-hosting line at the end is the one the GCC controls and Washington does not.

PARIS OPENS A HAMAS CHANNEL AS ITS PROSECUTORS OPEN A FILE ON ISRAEL

Senior Hamas officials met a French delegation in secret, reportedly the first such contact since October 7, and the meeting is said to have turned on a Hamas return to “1967 borders.” The contact surfaces weeks after France’s national anti-terror prosecutor opened a preliminary investigation against Israel, and it sits alongside Paris’s recognition push and its entry bans on Smotrich and Ben-Gvir.

ASSESSMENT

A government that lists Hamas as a terror organization sat down with Hamas and pointed its prosecutors at the state Hamas attacked — the order tells you which actor Paris treats as the problem. Crediting a Hamas “1967 borders” line as a diplomatic position is yet another laundering move. The PNAT file and the back-channel are one instrument worked from two ends, and neither was drafted in response to anything Israel did this month.

THE JOURNALIST COUNT QUIETLY LOSES MORE NAMES

The Committee to Protect Journalists has cut its Gaza tally from 276 to 259, removing at least eight Palestinians after concluding they had “participated in combat.” The corrections sit in a “clarifications” subpage with no public statement attached. The names are coming off because Hamas and Islamic Jihad have started naming their own war dead, publishing seven or eight military-wing obituaries a day and claiming as “military media” operatives the men the databases had filed as press. Ahmed Abu Eisha, a unit commander in PIJ’s Central Information Unit, still carries a CPJ profile praising his PhD in Arabic. Mohammed Abu Huwaidi, a UNESCO-condemned “journalist,” turns out to have served PIJ’s military media unit, and UNESCO’s condemnation is still on its website. A Meir Amit Center study of 266 killed “media workers” put roughly 60 percent inside the terror groups or clearly affiliated with them. The same week, Sergio DellaPergola of Hebrew University and Mark Zlochinn published a correction to the Lancet’s Gaza mortality survey, arguing sampling flaws inflated its death toll. Rival trackers — Stop Murdering Journalists at 366, the International Federation of Journalists — keep the operatives on their lists. One states outright that “if a Palestinian journalist organization claims them, they are journalists.”

ASSESSMENT

CPJ revises in a footnote nobody is meant to read while the original number keeps traveling under its own power, the count that drew the UNESCO statement, the wire condemnation, the “Israel kills journalists” headline. These databases exist to manufacture a figure that outruns its own retraction, and on that measure the figure has already done its work [the press vest as load-out, then as alibi, then as a number in a foreign ministry brief]. Hamas naming its own dead is the rare case where the adversary audits the source data for us, and the trackers that built two years of coverage on uncredited Telegram self-reporting are now discovering the provenance was always the weak point. DellaPergola’s Lancet correction lands on the same machine the same week — Western institutions scrubbing a hostile-sourced count clean and forwarding it as established fact.

ISRAEL REACHES FOR A NARRATIVE COMMAND WHILE OWNING NO TERRAIN

At the JNS International Policy Summit in Jerusalem, Special Envoy Fleur Hassan-Nahoum proposed a “unified narrative command” modeled on the IDF — a single nerve center to coordinate Israel’s information war. Tzipi Hotovely, on the same stage, told the room to drop victimhood messaging entirely: Israel is “fighting the world’s fight,” a battle of “good vs. evil,” and should say so. The summit’s plenary ran under the banner “Israel: A Global Superpower,” with Herzog, Ohana, UN Watch’s Hillel Neuer and others working the Durban legacy, AI bot networks, and the hasbara question against a global rise in Jew-hate.

ASSESSMENT

The diagnosis is right and at least a quarter-century late. A coordinated command beats the current scatter of ministries — but a command is a broadcast instrument, and broadcast fights the last news cycle while the other side owns the next one. The terrain is the encyclopedia entry, the AI training set, the classroom syllabus, the casualty database that CPJ is quietly editing this week — captured slowly, by organized editors, while Israel funds reactive messaging that arrives after the frame has already set. Hotovely’s instinct to trade victimhood for civilizational stakes is the sharper move of the two. Another shekel into messaging buys nothing if the institutions that launder the numbers are never contested where they actually live.

A JEWISH MAN DIES IN A MONTREAL SHOOTING POLICE CANNOT YET EXPLAIN

Three people are dead after a gunman opened fire Monday in Cote-des-Neiges, the heavily Jewish district of Montreal that holds kosher restaurants, Jewish schools, community centers, and a Chabad house. Among the dead is Michael Moshe Mizrahi, 68, an Israeli citizen. ZAKA is bringing him to burial in Israel. A Montreal police officer was killed and a second wounded when responders stormed a supermarket where the gunman had barricaded himself, and the shooter was neutralized at the scene. The attacker left a roughly 100-page manifesto, and police say the motive remains under investigation.

Mizrahi was reportedly mistaken for the attacker and hit by police fire, a sequence Canadian authorities are still working.

ASSESSMENT

The facts are not yet clear. What is not in doubt, however, is the standing condition. A Jewish district in a Western capital sat under armed lockdown, parents ran their children out of a park, and a community that has watched Toronto's synagogues shot up and the mob at the door now adds Montreal to the map whether or not the gunman meant to put it there. The threat environment no longer needs a confirmed motive to extract the cost.

NEW YORK VOTES WITH AIPAC RECAST AS THE MONSTER AND A JEWISH CONGRESSMAN TURNED AWAY AT THE COUNTER

New York City's primary lands Tuesday with Jewish political participation itself as a ballot question. Mayor Zohran Mamdani spent the weekend defending his description of AIPAC as among the "monsters who move dark money." A Williamsburg cafe barred Representative Dan Goldman, returned his money, and told the Jewish lawmaker it does not serve "genocide enablers." The DOJ has opened a probe. Representative Ro Khanna signed a pledge from TrackAIPAC, a group facing wide accusations of Jew-hate, to win its endorsement. JCRC-NY's Mark Treyger named the through-line plainly: assigning collective blame to Jews or perceived supporters of Israel is the definition of antisemitism.

ASSESSMENT

A sitting mayor, a congressman's challenger, and a coffee counter are all running the same operation — turn "Zionist" or "AIPAC" into the permission slip, then act on the Jew it points to. The vocabulary is doing the sorting the voters will ratify, and the institutions built to catch it are arriving after the round is called. This is the partisan sort reaching the words themselves, the warning we filed before the election that an antizionist administration would set the terms on which Jew-hatred gets named — and the same week a Brooklyn barista decided a Jewish congressman's cash was dirty is the week the question stopped being rhetorical for the diaspora's largest community.

Developments to Watch

Northern Front (Lebanon / Syria)

- Hezbollah names the trigger the cell was built to manage — Iran's UN representative and Hezbollah political-council deputy Mahmoud Qamati both put it on the record that any Israeli violation — including a strike on Lebanon or on Hezbollah — draws a response, with Qamati saying the group is on full alert “with its finger on the trigger.”
- Damascus declines the proxy role Trump floated — Syria's Ahmed al-Sharaa ruled out sending troops into Lebanon after Trump suggested Damascus take on Hezbollah, saying he favors dialogue.

Gaza & Southern Theater

- The Eilat sea breach reads as a defense probe — Three weeks after a vessel crossed into the Gulf of Eilat and drew Israeli naval fire before turning back toward Jordan, defense officials now assess it may have been unmanned and run to clock the response. A successful reconnaissance of the maritime approach is the move that precedes the manned attempt, and it surfaces the same week the Shin Bet chief names Eilat the likeliest site of the next October 7.
- The Houthi air vector reaches Aqaba — Israel is tracking Houthi-operated Yemenia flights into Jordanian airports, including King Hussein at Aqaba across the border from Ramon, the one regional corridor open to the Sanaa carrier. An air bridge that puts Houthi personnel and freight a few kilometers from Eilat hands the southern axis a logistics line that does not pass through Israeli or coalition airspace.

Regional Axis (Iran, Houthis, Militias)

- Pezeshkian flies to Islamabad tomorrow — Iran confirmed a one-day presidential trip to Pakistan, framed around economic ties and thanks for the mediation that carried the Geneva round.
- Iran and the Gulf monarchies set a security table of their own — Qatar's prime minister says Iran and the Gulf Arab states will hold a security meeting. It convenes as Rubio works the same capitals to sell the framework they reject, and a Tehran-Gulf channel that excludes Washington is the receipt for the realignment the brief has tracked toward the war's apparent victor.

Diplomatic & Legal

- The oil waiver may outrun what the President can deliver — Iranian sources flag that the Trump administration may not be able to lift the oil sanctions outright, because parts of any Iran accord — the nuclear terms among them — require Congressional approval.
- Germany's Hormuz escort mission stalls in the Bundestag — Berlin's planned naval contribution to securing the strait hit a procedural delay in parliament.

Iran trades a refusal it pays nothing for, the Gulf reallocates toward the side it watched survive, and the diaspora's largest community heads to the polls with "Zionist" already converted into a permission slip.
